- Poussin.—Another most beautiful Letter, entirely autograph also, of this eminent artist, to the Abbate di Cavour, at Rome, in fine preservation, 2l 12s 6d - ib. 1642
- This illustrious painter was born in Normandy, in 1594, of a noble, though poor family; after studying at Paris, he went to Rome, where the noble family of Del Pozzo was the earliest of his friends, under whose patronage he painted with great success, which coming to the knowledge of Louis XIII. he caused M. de Noyers, his minister, to prevail upon him to return to his native country in 1640, where he remained but a short period, when he returned to Rome, and died there, Nov. 19th, 1665. His merits are too well known to be noticed here, but it may not be out of place to state, that his Golden Calf in the Wilderness is in the King's collection, now in the National Gallery; his Seven Sacraments are at the Duke of Rutland's; a second series of which, painted by him for his friend M. de Chautelon, is in the Stafford Gallery; and many other monuments of his high talents are in this country.

Pulteney (W.) Earl of Bath, to Bryan Fairfax, informs him of his recovery, and that there is no news except about the rabbit woman of Godalming, and the Pretender; the first is already discovered to be false, and an imposition upon the world, 'tis very likely the last may come out in the same manner, though at present must appear to be very much alarmed, &c. &c. 1l 1s - 1726

Pulteney (W.) Earl of Bath, a most valuable and exceedingly interesting series of twenty-two Autograph Letters to F. Colman, British Envoy at Florence, and his Son, George Colman, the elder, with Mr. Pulteney's Reasons for accepting the peerage, in one vol. 4to. morocco, with proof portrait, 18l 18s 1727-64

This highly interesting correspondence contains a complete picture of the world, in his advice to George, whom the noble writer appears to have bred up educated at Westminster school and Christ Church college, Oxford, and started him upon the stage of life as a harrister. They are also replete with observations on public affairs, ministers at home and abroad; with many other most interesting passages relative to Sir Robert Walpole, Lord Chesterfield, and other persons of note. The reasons for his accepting the peerage comprise several pages in Colman's autograph, with minutes of a conversation with the earl, and Hooke the Roman historian. The earl was the most deadly opponent of Sir Robert Walpole, whom he attacked with a degree of eloquence and sarcasm that worsted every antagonist; and Walpole was often heard to say he dreaded his tongue more than another man's sword. Pulteney lived in the very height of popularity, but the moment he accepted the earldom, it ceased.
